О себе

I am a Korean-born New Zealand citizen currently residing in Korea. I am fluent in both Korean and English. I graduated from a university in Korea and later immigrated to New Zealand, where I studied English and Marketing. I lived in New Zealand for over 10 years, during which I worked as an assistant manager in a property development company before establishing my own international trading business. This business focused on exporting New Zealand and Australian products, and I also worked as a freelance interpreter, enhancing my skills in English communication.

Eager to work in a larger business environment, I returned to Korea and joined a construction company as the head of the international business development department, using my knowledge of English and marketing, I later became the head of the branch office in Russia. After 12 years in the construction industry in both Korea and Russia, I returned to Korea and then started my own business in Korea, importing construction materials from Russia and taking over my family's foodstuff business.

Additionally, I served as the Korean representative for the Russian medical company during COVID-19, gaining valuable insights into the medical field, and expanding my professional capabilities.

My diverse career path has given me a broad skill set and a deep understanding of various industries. I am passionate about my work and committed to continuous learning and professional growth.

My professional background in construction, foodstuff, and medical business as well as many other areas allows me to navigate complex professional environments with ease and confidence.

I am also highly confident in my interpretation skills across various fields, so feel free to contact me for any interpretation needs.
